Improving soybean yield under drought

In Nebraska, water is the main limiting factor in soybean yield. Soybean yield response to water is linear, and soybean genotypes differ in their water use efficiency as measured by yield per unit water applied. Graef will discuss options to improve soybean yield response to water and implications for both irrigated and rainfed production systems.