Corn residue grazing and baling can provide a valuable and cost effective means of feeding cattle and is a common practice in Nebraska. However, there are concerns about the effects of residue removal on corn yields and soil physical properties. The results of a long-term study concerning this issue will be presented.

Presented by

Tim Shaver

Associate Professor, Agronomy and Nutrient Management
Specialist, UNL Agronomy and Horticulture,
West Central Research and Extension Center

FRIDAY
March 4, 2016
3:30 pm

Keim Hall, Room 150
Refreshments served at 3 pm