JOHN PARRISH   CURRENT STUDENT, GRADUATES IN DECEMBER 2015
Interned at Dow Agrosciences, Nebraska and Colorado in 2014.

UNL has provided me numerous opportunities to grow on both an individual and professional level. I have been able to learn and grow from experiences I never thought were possible – becoming a plant science teaching assistant, Agronomy Club officer and completing an internship in a different part of the state.

AGRONOMY
Agronomists help develop and grow plants as well as design the integrated systems that the world will need for its food, fuel and fiber. They manage soil to enhance its quality for multiple uses such as crop production and storing water and carbon. Specialized options within the major can prepare you for a variety of dynamic careers.

I never would have imagined that right out of college I’d have the opportunity to run my own business. I often find myself thinking back to one of the last classes I took at UNL—AGRO 405. We visited a family farm near Aurora and then worked throughout the semester to come up with recommendations to improve their operation. I use the problem-solving skills I learned from this class to come up with solutions for my own customers.

MATT LANGLEY  GRADUATED AUGUST 2012
Currently owns and operates Langley Precision Ag.

My experience in Argentina was eye-opening. It offered me a world view and helped me explore new things. I had to move beyond my comfort zone to learn on a deeper level. Overall, it was a very well-rounded experience that I wish I could do again!
