The forage research group has a position available to be filled immediately. End date is yet to be determined, but it will last until at least late September. Work into October is likely. The number of hours is flexible, ~5-15 hrs./wk., but the person absolutely must be available Tuesday and Thursday mornings. This person will be responsible for assisting with an ongoing grazing project, and willingness to learn about cattle, watering systems, etc. is a must. They will also be expected to assist with vegetation sampling when appropriate, and as their schedule allows. Experience with science, animals, and outdoor work would be preferred but not required. Training will be provided. A good driving record is also required. Pay will depend on academic standing following university guidelines. Contact Heidi Hillhouse at hhillhouse3@unl.edu to apply.
